Now, this behavior is changed – if you collapse the last visible child column - it is collapsed as well as its parent column. The other change is when you switch the visibility of a parent column from collapsed to visible – the parent column becomes visible as well as all its children columns.

It defaults to 'Release' which will cause generated tiles that are scrolled out of view to be released which will eliminate unnecessary elements from remaining in the visible tree. This preserves the current behavior. When TileRetentionMode is set to 'Retain' then generated tiles that are scrolled out of view will be retained in the visual tree to optimize scrolling performance when they are subsequently scrolled back into view.
